To Whom It May Concern,

Regarding quality control and bacteriostatic properties of Slippery Stuff Personal Lubricants, we are dedicated to providing the best and safest products possible. We use a combination of methods for protecting and preserving our products. Each batch of product is tested at an independent lab for bacteria and contaminants before packaging. When the lab confirms the purity of the product, it is then bottled and heat treated to kill any potential bacteria. For ongoing bacteriostatic properties, all our formulas also contain a preservative to continue protecting against bacterial growth as the product ages. These protect the unopened product for two years, and for one year once the product is opened.

In the event that an expiration date is not visible on the product, the lot number may be used to determine the expiration date. All of our lot numbers show the batch number and the year the item was made in this way: 09-23. This means it is the 9th batch of the year 2023 and therefore expires in 2025.

We continuously strive to meet our customers needs in health and safety and always welcome your feedback.

Sincerely,

Mike O'Farrell
